THE ZIONIST CONGRESS—THIRTY YEARS AGO AND TO-DAY

The fifteenth Zionist Congress which will be held in Basle at the end of this month will mark the passage of thirty years since the first congress was convoked in the same city. The panorama of Jewish life during that period presents some interesting scenes and situations. The changes and transitions which have taken place are almost revolutionary. Consider the background which made the first Congress possible, and lent it significance.

There was a Jewish life comprehending the bulk of the Jewdom, rich in forms and traditions and values. A series of generations had lived in a given atmosphere and reacted to the conditions of life in a distinctive and characteristic manner. Habits of thought and conduct had evolved. The institutions and attitudes of the Jewish commonwealth bore the impress of a definite personality. The sum total of Jewish experiences and peculiarities constituted the material of a rich national culture.

There had come the need of formulating a working adjustment between the mass of Jewish life with its distinctiveness of culture and the forces of western civilization which impinged upon it. A number of formulas had been advanced. The one most generally satisfying was that of Jewish nationalism.

Now the formula of Jewish nationalism involved the underlying assumption that the Jewish people, decrepit as it may have appeared, still had the virility and capacity to create a valuable national culture. It implied a complimentary appraisal of Jewish life. It placed the centre of gravity in Jewish life. It took it for granted that Jewish life was worth while. The question according to its light was how to square the conditions of the extra-Jewish world with the fundamental and indefeasible character of the Jewish people.

So when Herzl appeared on the scene he found a full and intensive Jewish life and a formulation of its significance in the terms of Jewish nationalism. Hess, Kalischer, Pinsker, Smolenskin, Ahad Ha'am and the host of Hebrew revivalists had expounded their nationalistic interpretation of the meaning of Jewish existence. What was left for him to do was to cast the glowing mass of Jewish nationalism into the mould of political activism. He translated the meaning of Jewism into the terms of a political ambition and political organization.

The first Zionist Congress thirty years ago had as its background a rich and colourful Jewish life. One need but call to mind the figures who stalked across the arena at that time to appreciate the character of that gathering. There were delegates from the East-European communities. They were men of learning steeped in Jewish thought and idealism. Their universe of interest consisted of Jewish problems. They were sure of one thing—that there was a Jewish people unmistakably Jewish. Their object was to organize their people politically, and secure for it the one requisite that was lacking to complete its status as a nation—a territory. The slogan was "a land for the people."

We are now on the eve of the fifteenth Congress, thirty years later. The center of gravity is the territory that we are supposed to possess. We have a land. The chief question now is what is

Feet of Clay

By Benjamin Gunn

In the heart of New York's ghetto stands the rickety old Cannon Street Talmud Torah. The good people of this tiny, turbulent community speak fervently of this old school of Biblical instruction. The children listen in awed silence to the account of the miraculous deeds of Reb Shillman, the venerated principal of the school.

Fantastic stories of solitary visits to aid a poor family freezing in a cellar, of matzohs delivered on the eve of Passover by someone from nowhere—there are hundreds of tales which comprise the ever-growing Reb Shillman legend.

Elbowing his way up the street, came Reb Shillman, beaming a response to the grocer, the tailor, to fat Mrs. Klein who did his washing. He answered their warm greetings and paused for a brief chat with a breezy, curly-haired young rabbinical scholar. He proceeded onward, and as he neared his destination his pleased expression vanished. His lips, just visible through a luxuriant black beard streaked with grey, compressed themselves in disapproval. In pained astonishment he approached an excited group of boys grovelling in the dirt alongside the Talmud Torah steps.

"Shoot—I betcha ten cents you don't make a seven, Sammy. Come on—scared?" Daniel Becker's high-pitched voice, betraying his nervous tension, trailed off into surprised silence as he saw his companions slip panic-stricken away, leaving him alone with his first full of change suspended dramatically in mid-air. He felt the presence of someone behind him and he fancied that he even recognized the familiar smell of Russian tobacco that clung to the person of his beloved teacher. Daniel turned quickly and caught his breath as he found Reb Shillman's small brown eyes gazing sternly down at him The boy blushed furiously and bowed his head to avert that piercing gaze.

Reb Shillman spoke, and at the sound of his rumbling tones Daniel's head bent even lower. He felt completely weighed down by a sense of mortification. He had been discovered engaged in an unworthy pastime by the master whom he revered.

The principal was known to confine his speech to three languages. When he was not discoursing in melodious Hebrew, or crackling Russian, he spoke Yiddish, whether it was to some bulky policeman at a street crossing whose speech was a decided Irish brogue, or whether it was to an erring youngster of his brood.

"So, Daniel, because I spoke of you in class only yesterday as my best pupil you return the appreciation by disgracing yourself, your family, your Talmud Torah —and me, by gambling. God is my witness that I would not have believed it of you if anyone had told me. And how excited it has left you! I could not believe my eyes. For a few pennies you should. . . ." The Reb's voice petered off into incredulity.

Daniel would have felt less miserable if only his master had taken him by the scruff of the neck and had boxed his ears soundly. But this was completely disheartening. He felt the pain in the Reb's voice and it only rendered him more desolate. He tried to reply, but all that came forth was a choking sob. Tears started from his eyes and as much as he fought against them, slid down on his flushed cheeks. He felt a paternal hand on his shoulder.

"Look up at me, Daniel."

But he felt he was not equal to it; even feared childishly that he would be blinded by the light which he secretly imagined shone from the person of Reb Shillman. He realized that his chin was being lifted up firmly and found himself gazing into eyes full of sympathy.

"Now tell me why, my boy. How does such a business come to involve you? Tell me, Daniel," he said soothingly. "I want to help you."

He gulped hard. He spoke finally with an effort.

"Reb Shillman—I don't—I didn't think it was so wrong.

to be done with it. Visualize the type of delegates who will be in the foreground: American Jews. What is their chief characteristic? Capacity to give or take money; a desire to build up the land; supposed expertness in industry or colonization. The new delegates do not represent a national culture. They represent a building venture. They have one constant fact before them—a land. Their plans all revolve around this fact.

Jewish life has lost its vitality. It is no longer an immediate source of sustenance to the Jewish mind. Zionist policy does not concern itself with the Jewish people. Its main interest is to develop Palestine. The slogan is: "Money to build up the land." And this policy is not fastidious about the standards to be exacted from the people who are to shape Jewish destiny. It does not matter now what the Jewish people think or how they live so long as the means are supplied to keep Palestine going. Thus we have the adoption of the agency idea which is the negation of all Zionist ideology.

A land for a people or money for a land? This formulation of the central problems as they struck the first Congress and as they strike the present one epitomize the change which has taken place in Jewish life during the past thirty years.

Henrikas Rabinavicius, the only Jew in the Lithuanian diplomatic service, has resigned from his post as Consul General of New York following a statement made by Prime Minister Waldemaras last January that he wanted the New York representative to be "a Lithuanian, not a Jew," and a subsequent official communication that his successor would be appointed, it became known. Mr. Rabinavicius's resignation was accepted and became effective on August 1. No one has been appointed to the vacated post and Vice-Consul P. Dazvardis is Acting Consul. Mr. Rabinavicius has held diplomatic posts in Copenhagen, London and Washington. At his home at 56 East Fifty-fifth Street yesterday, he said that "this incident should not call for general accusation of the Lithuanian people or the Lithuanian Government of systematic anti-Semitism."

But I really do it because—oh, I'm ashamed to tell you." He hid his face in his hands.

"Come, my boy," said Reb Shillman, taking the boy's hands in his own, "you can tell me everything."

Daniel gave him a grateful glance.

"Well, you see, all the money I made working for Heller's Fruit Store after school, I give to mother, and I've been working ever since Pop was sent to the hospital three years ago and never came back. So I never have a cent for myself and when I get a tip once in a while I just feel an awful aching to make it grow into more. It's so hard to get a few cents together for some of the things I want," he ended up.

There was a quizzical expression in the Reb's eyes and the intimation of a pitying smile about his lips.

'Come with me," he said.

Up the winding stairway with its old-fashioned balustrade Daniel followed, and into the deserted class-room. Even the empty benches seemed to him to look alert at the master's dominating presence. Quietly and meticulously Reb Shillman laid away his outer garments, donned a shiny alpaca jacket and adjusted his skull cap. He seated himself with a soft sigh before his desk and motioned Daniel to a chair alongside.

"Listen carefully, my boy, and you will hear of another Daniel who saw unerringly the value of the standards of life."

Reb Shillman pushed his spectacles forward a bit on his nose and opened a square, peculiarly bound, gilt-edged volume. When he started to read, Daniel realized it was a Yiddish translation of the Bible. Reb Shillman was a magnetic reader. As he went on the boy pictured the tale with striking vividness. It was the story of Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's first dream. Well did he know it and wondered why his teacher was reading it to him now. That warmly expressive, throaty voice called on:

"'Thou sawest a great image. . . . As for that image, its head was of fine gold, its breast and its arms of silver, its belly and its thighs of brass, its legs of iron, its feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon its feet that were of iron and clay, and broke him in pieces'—so!"

Whack! The Reb's long wooden ruler came down suddenly against the desk. Daniel gasped. To him it was a clap of thunder that sounded as he visualized that huge, shining figure toppling to earth. He looked up and found Reb Shillman chuckling and shaking with merriment in his chair. The old man leaned over and laid a hand on the boy's knee with a soul-warming air of kindliness.

"Daniel, did you understand? That image, for all its glitter, had feet of clay. Your image of the dazzling delight of the power of money has an equally weak foundation. When you get to be as old as I am you will not have to be told, you will realize where man's happiness lies. In good deeds and acts of appreciation you will find your happiness. And now your road to a contented future points to your poor mother and your sister. Make them happy and that priceless treasure you must remember—" He turned again to the printed page—

"'. . . And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.' Do but follow the path before you now and no one can deny you the success which must be yours ultimately."

"Oh, Reb, I see it all now. I'm sorry—no, I'm happy. How can I thank you—oh!" The boy impulsively pressed his lips against the old man's veined hand.

Reb Shillman pulled his hand away and blew his nose loudly. He rose, and with his arm about Daniel's shoulders, led him to the door.

"Here, Daniel, my child, take this and read it whenever you feel yourself slipping. It is my own—it is yours now. And remember," smiling, "the new image must not have feet of clay."

Throughout his life Daniel Becker was led by the inspiration of his warm-hearted and wise master. He never tired of reading the story of Daniel out of a certain peculiarly bound, gilt-edged Bible.—The Chicago Jewish Child.

ZIONISTS PREPARING FOR BASLE CONGRESS

There is a feverish excitement among the Zionist groups in various lands in preparation for the coming Congress which will be held in Basle. For the past few months, the opposition groups have been conducting intense propaganda in Central Europe against the present leadership of the movement and Dr. Weizmann himself addressed large gatherings in Germany with a view of offsetting the impression left by the Revisionist propagandists. The results of the elections for delegates to the Congress show that the opposition has made but little headway and that its representatives at the Congress will be very few. On the other hand the results of the elections also indicate a considerable weakening of the large central body of Zionists. The two extremes, the Mizrachi and the Poale Zionists, appear to have made greatest progress in the acquisition of larger memberships. The American delegation, the largest of any one country, will probably support the administration and occupy the so-called centre position in the Congress. Still, it is predicted that it will be very difficult for the present organization to carry through any reforms, because of the opposition of the extreme wings of the movement.

Among the eighteen delegates elected by the Polish Zionists, eight belong to the Mizrachi group, four are Poale Zion and five belong to the Weizmann supporters. The radical Zionists and the Revisionists did not succeed in electing their candidates. In Palestine, on the other hand, only one Mizrachi was elected, while the Revisionists obtained two mandates, the young Workers' Party five, the Mizrachi Workers two and the Middle Class Party five. It is estimated that not more than 250 delegates in all will attend the congress, and among these there will be forty-eight Americans.

Although the report of the experts will not be ready by the time that the fifteenth congress assembles, the plan of the survey and of the agency will undoubtedly form a topic of heated discussion. But the problem of internal organization will occupy the minds of the delegates to a much larger extent and will give rise to many fiery speeches. Hitherto, the executive committee, the body that is responsible for all the work that is being accomplished, was composed by representatives of the various groups that entered into the movement. The American Zionists, at the recent Atlantic City convention, decided to suggest that the executive in the future should be elected by the Congress irrespective of party affiliation. This is apparently in harmony with the wish of Dr. Weizmann, who only recently expressed himself very strongly on the subject. "I believe that I have the concurrence of my colleagues in saying that the members of the Zionist Executive must not be responsible to or dependent on the confidence of any body or party other than the Congress. The future Palestine Zionist Executive must be so composed as to be in complete accord, in spirit as well as in words, on the essential problems of the movement; the stabilization of our finances, the insistence on the priority of our colonization work over all other expenditures, the postponement of all new schemes as long as no new large resources are available, and the adoption of the economic reforms, recommended by expert opinion. The preparation of the new financial schemes shall be in the main the business of the London Executive."

The Fifteenth Zionist Congress may bring about some very interesting changes in the management of the movement and in the personnel of its leaders and the eyes of world Jewry will be directed toward Basle for the next few weeks.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPES DURING THE EARTHQUAKE

Palestine correspondents, who are not as a rule great believers in the supernatural, tell most stirring stories about the recent earthquake which in a former generation would be regarded as direct miracles, which might have been commemorated by special celebrations. Among the six or seven hundred victims there is not a single Jew. Many of the escapes of Jews read like fairy tales.

In Ramlah there is a small house, consisting of four rooms, which was occupied by two families, a Jewish and an Arab. The rooms belonging to the Arab family were entirely destroyed while those in which the Jewish family lived remained intact.

The Arab settlements were destroyed and the Jewish villages remained untouched. The Mosque of Omar stands within the shadow of the Wailing Wall, the sad remnant of the Temple. The dilapidated Wall was unhurt, while the imposing mosque suffered greatly from the quake. More intimate individual stories are told. A Rabbi who was engaged in the study of the Talmud and went over to his bookcase to look up some reference. Just at that moment the earthquake occurred and heavy stones fell on the seat where the rabbi had been sitting a second before. A child was forgotten in its cradle in the squabble to escape from the house. Heavy stones were found all around the cradle, but the baby remained untouched.

While the Jews are careful not to emphasize these manifestations of Providence, the Arabs have noticed it and interpreted it as a sign from above. The ready help that Jews of all lands have offered for the distressed families also made a deep impression upon the Arab population. Although there are in Palestine and in Egypt many wealthy Arabs, very little has thus far been contributed by them to the relief funds. It is said that the unfortunate catastrophe will more than anything else help to change the attitude of the Arabs toward the Jewish settlement in Palestine.

Oscar Blechman, Brooklyn philanthropist and president of the dry goods firm of S. Blechman & Sons, died last Friday at his home, 1217 East Twenty-second Street, after a short illness, at the age of sixty-two. Mr. Blechman was the director of the East Midwood Jewish Centre and a member of Temple Emanu-El of Boro Park, the Israel Zion Hospital Auxiliary, the Jewish Federation of Charities, the Keren Hayesod and the Boro Park Y.M.H.A. In addition, Mr. Blechman devoted a great deal of his time to the work of the Brooklyn Home for the Aged and the Consumptive Aid Society.

The Protestant Evangelical churches of the United States lost 500,000 persons from their rolls in the past year, a condition serious enough to have evoked a special report from the Inter-Church Conference continuation committee. "The negligence and indifference of pastors" received blame, also the war, the deadening character of the materialistic movement of the age, the increased tendency toward migration, and the lack of care in the instruction of the young in religious principles. The churches which are suffering such wholesale loss of members are expected to unite in concerted measures of prevention, the continuation committee predicted. One good, helpful suggestion could come from the Jews for whom many benevolent Christian churches establish missions. Jews are accustomed to sacrifice and are willing to give up the generous benefactions bestowed upon them by the mission branch of the churches. They don't want to be converted and would feel much better about the money being used to bring Christians rather than Jews into the fold. It is their wistful hope that there will be money enough only for the good of the souls of the delinquent Protestants.

As to the blame which the war receives for the defection of the Protestants, the committee says: "Probably all will admit that the World War, with its profound political, social and industrial disturbances, has had a disastrous effect upon the Christian church, well nigh overpowering Christian civilization, with its appeal to brutal instincts, its lowering of moral tone and its benumbing influence on the spiritual life of Christianity." So here is something for the ministers, including many of the rabbis, to remember in the next war when they get up in their pulpits and tell the people how much better the world will be as soon as they win.

The Federation of Polish Jews in America, while undertaking to raise $75,000 for a statue to Haym Salomon, Jewish patriot of 1776, has been denied the right to erect the memorial by the Municipal Art Commission of New York. The Art Commission finds that Salomon was "only an estimable merchant" and doubts that he is entitled to immortality through a monument in Madison Square. Here the matter must rest until the Federation of Polish Jews can show documentary proof of what Salomon did to help in the fight for independence; and, since the records were lost in the British invasion of Washington in 1814, this is next to impossible. Meantime, the Jews are claiming that it is anti-Jewish prejudice which does not want to connect Haym Salomon so closely with the nation's history.

Salomon is recognized in the Encyclopaedia Americana. He came to this country as a young Pole just before the Revolution; was imprisoned and sentenced to death for aiding the colonies but escaped to Philadelphia. He accumulated a fortune in banking and is said to have lent the government amounts totalling $600,000 without interest or security. In 1865 the Committee on Revolutionary Claims in the Senate recognized the indebtedness of the United States to Salomon. But he was never reimbursed nor have his heirs received any payment of a debt that would run into millions now.

One member of the Art Commission has said that this Commission withheld its approval because the design was not satisfactory and because the Commission was not satisfied that Salomon should be so signally honoured. In the first place there was no talk of Salomon's place in history; only of the nature of the winning design of several submitted by artists for the proposed statue. The Commission merely suggested some changes in the model by Anton Schaaf who has designed numerous war memorials in New York City. These changes were made; also a replica of the statue was made and placed in the park. The Commission came to see it but never gave final approval. Since then grave doubts have descended upon it as to Salomon's proper worth as a patriot, and so the fun begins.

The statue of Salomon had to be imaginary since there were no pictures of the man to be had. Schaaf's design shows a figure in Colonial dress standing in front of a circular bench. There is certainly nothing strikingly original to be claimed for such a memorial, and even as a means of honouring Salomon it doesn't justify $75,000 worth. There are already too many monuments of men in the dress of their [illegible] going unnoticed and too many other creations in stone or bronze, [illegible] them ugly. Unfortunate as it would be for prejudice to prevent a statue being erected to a Jew and unfair as it would be for a patriot's services to be belittled, $75,000 raised in Salomon's honour can be put to better use any day than in the purchase of such a non-descript monument. There are better ways of doing a man honour and of keeping his memory alive so long as the sick and the poor, the lame and the blind ask for help.

FIND BIBLICAL MANNA IS PRODUCT OF INSECTS

The secret of the manna of the wilderness has been discovered by an expedition of entomologists connected with the Hebrew University, headed by Dr. Fritz Bodenheimer, of the Zionist Experimental Agricultural Station, and Oskar Theodor, of the Micro-biological Institute of the Hebrew University, which in July went into the Sinai Peninsula to investigate the problem, according to a special cable to the "New York Times," dated Jerusalem, August 16.

The so-called manna has hitherto been assumed to be an exudation of a species of tamarisk trees known as the Tamarix Mannifera. The Arabs, who call it "heavenly manna," collect it and sell it to pilgrims.

The Jewish expedition reports the substance is not a natural vegetable secretion, but an excretion from the bodies of various species of coccids living on the tamarisk. Clear sulphur-like drops exude from the abdomen of the insect, and falling to the ground, form hard whitish grains of sugar, varying in size from a pinhead to a pea.

The amount varies according to the amount of winter rains. During a good season it is asserted that it is possible for a man to collect nearly three and a half pounds daily. The expedition observed manna deposits over a large stretch of country.

Max Safron, St. Louis art dealer, has purchased, through a New York agent for $250, a painting which, according to Maurice Goldblatt, of Chicago, an international art expert, is a lost masterpiece of Eugene Delacroix, early nineteenth century French painter. Goldblatt estimated the value as "anywhere from $50,000 to $250,000." Goldblatt named the picture "A Scene Before the Temple in Jerusalem." He said he first identified it as a genuine Delacroix through the colouring and attention to detail shown in the careful painting of more than 1,000 faces. He confirmed his belief by discovering the initials "E.D." ingeniously concealed in the corners of a small banner in the picture.

Dr. Jacob Mann, professor of Jewish Literature and History at the Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, has won world-wide fame as the foremost authority on the Jews in Egypt and in Palestine, under the Fatimid Caliphs. At a luncheon given in his honour prior to his departure for Palestine to take up his position as Visiting Professor to the University of Jerusalem for the academic year 1927-1928, Dr. David Philipson spoke in the highest terms of Dr. Mann as a profound scholar and a gentleman. As an authority on the Geonic period of Jewish history, said the Dean of American Reform Rabbis, Dr. Mann stands facile princeps. He had enhanced the reputation of the Hebrew Union College, and Dr. Philipson was happy in the thought that the invitation extended to this scholar by the Jerusalem University would bring the two great sister institutions of Jewish learning closely together.

THERE IS NOTHING GIVES US MORE PLEASURE THAN TO SEE OUR JEWISH YOUNG MEN FORGING AHEAD. THOUGH QUITE YOUNG, HE HAS HAD CONSIDERABLE EXPERIENCE IN THE BUSINESS WORLD FOR THE PAST EIGHT OR NINE YEARS, THE LAST TWO YEARS BEING SPENT AS A COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER. HE IS WELL-KNOWN THROUGHOUT THE PROVINCE AND IS LIKED BY ALL WHO COME IN CONTACT WITH HIM. AS WE HAVE SAID, WE LIKE TO SEE OUR YOUNGER GENERATION GO RIGHT AHEAD, STEPPING INTO THE OFFICES USUALLY HELD BY BIGGER MEN, AND WE KNOW THAT SUCH SPIRIT MINGLED WITH THE PEP AND PUSH OF YOUTH, AND THE WIDE EXPERIENCE AND BUSINESS TRAINING OF MR. CAPLAN WILL MAKE HIM A SUCCESS. HERE'S MORE POWER TO HIM.

The Misses Bernice and Phyllis Zittenfeld, the thirteen-year-old American twins who have gone to Boulogne with the idea of swimming the English Channel, are said to have created a strong impression in the swimming colony at Cape Gris Nez. Undaunted by the rough sea, the two girls had a three-hour training swim under the guidance of the veteran trainer, T. W. Burgess. The young swimmers paired each other in turn. The onlookers were much struck with the girls' gift and power of endurance.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

ANTI-JEWISH EXCESSES IN BULGARIAN CITY

Reports of anti-Jewish excesses in Philipopolis, a large industrial town in southern Bulgaria, appeared in French papers last week. It was said that a number of members of the Association for the Defence of the Fatherland attacked the Jewish neighbourhood, seriously injuring a number of Jews and indulging in other acts of violence against the Jewish inhabitants. The police is reported to have remained neutral during the attack.

Sofia will be the scene of the Conference of the Commissions of the International League of Nations Union next October, which will discuss among other subjects also the minority problems. The Jewish League of Nations Society in Bulgaria is making extensive preparations for that meeting and is inviting a number of prominent Jews and Jewish institutions to submit data and documents so that the Jewish cause might be properly presented.

STUDENT BODIES IN SESSION

The Congress of the German Students' Association, recently held in Wurzberg, decided to uphold the statutes of the Federation of German Students, which provide for the exclusion of Jewish students from membership in the Federation. This was done in spite of the warning issued by the Minister of Education. The government has refused to approve the constitution and it is expected that this will lead to the disruption of the Federation.

The International Students' Service Conference was held in Berlin last week. The position of the Jewish students was given considerable discussion and a resolution was adopted which regards the numerous clauses as "improper" and demands that no discrimination be practiced in universities against students on the ground of racial, religious or political differences.

The Federation of German Students of the Jewish Faith held its annual session at Freiburg. The meeting was introduced by a service at the synagogue which was attended by the 300 delegates present. The speakers lamented the existence of anti-semitism in the universities and in the student bodies which makes it necessary for them to segregate themselves in separate groups.

SIR GEORGE LEWIS KILLED IN TRAIN ACCIDENT

The tragic death of Sir George Lewis, one of the most noted London lawyers, occurred in Switzerland last week. Sir George was the son of the first baronet, Sir George Lewis, and the grandson of James Graham Lewis, the founder of the famous firm of Lewis & Lewis, probably the largest law firm in London. His father was known for his prosecution of notorious frauds and libel cases and was held in the highest esteem at the bar. The death of Sir George occurred at Montreux, where he accidentally fell under a railway train.

THREE BIG LITTLE WORDS

Happy New Year

AT the advent once more of the High Holidays comes the beautiful Jewish custom of sending New Year's Greetings to one's relatives and friends. This custom, originated by the Jewish people, is thousands of years old. In ancient Judaea the town crier would carry the message to the dwellers in the villages and the cities, to the country-folk gathered in the towns to celebrate Rosh Hashonah in the traditional manner.

With the flight of time the honourable profession of town crier disappeared. But the deeply rooted custom among the Jewish people of sending "L'Shono Tovu" greetings remained. And there gradually grew up a custom of sending personal greeting cards through the mails. Many of these cards were works of art, and are treasured as heirlooms to this day.

When cities and towns were small, and one knew one's friends intimately, this system worked perfectly. But as cities grew, and one's circle of friends extended, it was inevitable that in the hurly-burly of sending hundreds of cards, some cherished friends were overlooked. The endless explanations and heart-burnings caused the development of a new and better system.

Extend your NEW YEAR GREETINGS to your relatives and friends through the SPECIAL NEW YEAR EDITION of THE CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW to be issued Friday, September 23rd.

Fill out the coupon and return to THE CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW, 288 St. James Street, Montreal, or 319 Bay Street, Toronto, before Monday, September 12th.
